Adobe Photoshop 1. The first thing you'll want to do when you open Photoshop is create a new file. 2. Select the New document icon. 3. In the pop-up window, choose Image | Grayscale or RGB. 4. At the top right of the screen, select your desired image resolution. This will depend upon your image's size but for a typical portrait, I would choose 72 PPI. 5. For depth of field, you can experiment. I typically stick with the standard 4 or 5 pixels. 6. Finally, you'll want to change the settings from RGB to Grayscale. Your first image may not look exactly how you want it to because you'll be manipulating it to be how you want it to look. I first make adjustments to the basic image to fix a few issues and then I do a few additional adjustments to the image to make it look more like the final product. 7. Once you're satisfied with the image, press OK. You'll end up with your new image in the Layers window. 8. In the Layers panel, click on the thumbnail of the image. This will group your image into a single layer and move the original image into the background. The layer you currently have selected is the image layer. 9. Click on the white background in the Layers panel. This will select the entire white background. You want to make the layer you're working on completely transparent. 10. Right-click on the background layer and select Blending Options from the context menu. The options are as follows: Effect > Blending > Screen Effect > Blending > Lighten Effect > Blending > Opaque You'll see the Screen option. You can also check the box at the bottom of the menu to see the blending options you have by default. You can also check the box at the bottom of the menu to see the blending options you have by default. 11. Click OK. This will add a screen overlay. The screen overlay has the white background, so you want to make sure it's transparent. You can see this by looking at the composite preview image at the bottom left of your screen. 12. Next, you need to increase the Opacity of the layer to increase the transparency. You can do this by clicking on the layer and scrolling down in the Properties panel, to the Patient-reported adverse drug events can improve quality of care. Patient-reported outcomes (PROs) are increasingly used for measuring quality of care and as evaluative tools for improving quality, although less is known about how PROs relate to quality as perceived by patients. Our objective was to determine the association between patients' perception of quality and adverse drug events (ADEs). In this cross-sectional study, all outpatient medical services of a health maintenance organization in New York were surveyed. This survey included a set of 12 questions about the patient's experience with ADEs, their physician, and the medical practice. The physicians' performance was rated on the basis of the previous performance of the practice in the state, and each patient's experience with quality of care in general was also rated. The data were analyzed using the  $\chi^2$  test. There were 40,486 questionnaires returned (response rate, 79.6%), with 8,249 (20.5%) of the respondents reporting at least 1 ADE. The risk of reporting an ADE was significantly associated with the patient's rating of quality of care in general, the physician, and adverse events reported to the physician. The risk for ADE was highest in an overall poor-quality rating, a poor-quality rating of the physician, and poor-quality events reported to the physician. Patients consistently rate quality

The rest of Canada has not been left out of the retail spending slowdown which is occurring in the U.S. The country's largest retailers - like Shoppers Drug Mart and Wal-Mart - are reporting disappointing comparable-store sales in Canada, signalling the possibility of retail sales slumping in the coming weeks. Shoppers drug Mart (TSE: SHO), which is the country's largest drugstore chain, reported a 0.9 per cent year-over-year decline in fourth quarter sales, continuing their "lacklustre growth" at a time when Americans are clocking up their first holiday shopping dollars. They also posted worse-than-expected full-year revenue, bringing in $3.25 billion, down 2.1 per cent. Top 10 retail organizations by market capitalization fall The data do suggest that Shoppers' dollar volume growth is slowing, not necessarily declining. They also noted that weekly operations were stable, despite a drop in orders and shipment growth. That's one of the ways they're adding to their market share, by growing their weekly operations. The company's performance was not as good as what some analysts were expecting, as their numbers had been on the rise for a few weeks. It came in below what analysts polled by Thomson Financial expected, as they had been hoping for 7.7 per cent growth. The company also missed on its guidance, which was for a 1.1 per cent growth. They also said that the slow growth was still due to a strong U.S. economy in the third quarter, and that their top priority moving forward is to build a stronger business in Canada. Walmart (NYSE: WMT), with $496 billion in market capitalization, actually reported a slight increase in the fourth quarter. This was a 0.7 per cent increase, although the company as a whole reported a 4.1 per cent fall in sales. Their numbers still posted a strong 8.8 per cent annual growth rate, bringing in $115.5 billion. Comparable-store sales, which is what they consider all stores, totalled $111.5 billion in the fourth quarter. They also reported 8.1 per cent growth in profit, with $12.1 billion in net income. The biggest loser in their earnings report came in the form of Target (NYSE: TGT), which fell from being the biggest company to lose market cap in the United States to the 10th.
