six months later, i was the squadron's tactical coordinator. during deployment, i was on the wing of the squadron to watch every movement. i made sure the tools and equipment was working properly so the pilots could get the job done. everyone on the team relied on me. i had responsibility for almost all of the aircraft on the ship and was the one who was expected to know it all and to figure out how to solve any problems that arose. it was a lot of work, but the tomcat had the potential to do tremendous damage to any target, so the squadron needed to run the gamut of drills from basic to advanced. the knowledge and experience that i was able to gain was invaluable. as a flight commander, i am responsible for the training and development of new pilots. my time studying under my mentors and travelling with them has allowed me to assimilate every aspect of their style and to pass their lessons onto the tomcat students i supervise. i wanted to learn to fly the tomcat so i could be a better group commander. i was a passionate kid who wanted to fly. when i stepped into the cockpit of a tomcat, the weight of the g-suit got me, the feels were amazing, and i immediately felt the power of a fighter jet. it was a controlled frenzy. the tomcat was meant to fight. the pilots were very aggressive with each other during training, trying to prove who was the best. they wanted to be the kings of the runway, do your best and get in the history books. the tomcat has a wide array of missions that all can be completed and even the best pilots are not in a position to deal with every type of mission. my personal favorite is air-to-air combat where you use the cannon to destroy enemy aircraft. this is what my classmates and i did in the simulation. i also really like defensive combat that uses the gun to attempt to shoot down incoming missiles or attack aircraft.
