the installation of windows

10 requires the computer to be connected to the internet, and the computer should also have an active internet connection when downloading the iso. if the computer is connected to the internet, please verify that the dns servers are set to the default option from your network adapter's properties. you can also change the dns servers in the advanced settings section of the network adapter. you may encounter a problem where the partition on which you install windows 10 appears to be full when the computer is powered off. this occurs when you install the operating system on an external drive that contains a large amount of free space. to resolve this problem, you can remove the external drive from the computer and then restart the computer to install windows 10. alternatively, you can transfer the free space back to the internal drive before starting the installation. if you are using windows 8.1 32 bit, or you are having difficulty installing windows 8.1 on uefi bios, there are a few steps to follow before installing the operating system. to resolve this problem, make sure your bios is set to ahci and verify that you have setup the windows 8.1 partition as gpt. the installation should then proceed smoothly. note: uefi bios should be used in all new computers. if you are not using the recommended uefi bios, you may need to use legacy bios. if you need to change your bios settings, refer to your computer's documentation. to check the version of windows 8.1 you are running, go to settings > update & security > windows update, and then select the check for updates button. this will allow you to check for and download any available updates. 5ec8ef588b
